'Ring!' The school bell had rung. It's time for class. 'Class, today we are going to talk about the Ice Age,' said Miss Chan. 'It began 2.4 billion years ago... Ivy! Are you sleeping in class?' asked Miss Chan, irritated. Ivy woke up instantly. 'History is so boring,' she thought.

After school, Ivy walked down the orange streets. There were leaves everywhere. She breathed in the chilly air while she closed her eyes and tried to capture the scent of it. Suddenly, Ivy stepped onto something hard. It looked like a snowflake-shaped device. She bent down to pick it up. Suddenly, snowflakes surrounded her. Covering her without any inch of space. As Ivy started to get dizzy, she landed on something freezing and soft.

'Snow?' she exclaimed. That was unexpected. She looked around. There was nothing except snow and ice. There were mountains too but they were covered with frost. Ivy stepped onto the white McFlurry and explored around. It was very windy and snow was flying around like it was having a snowball fight. Ivy had nothing except a sweater and pants to keep her warm. She clutched her sweater tightly and walked through the snow storm. Her vision was blurry and she bumped into a furry object. 'It must be a big fur blanket,' Ivy thought. She stopped herself, 'wait, there are no blankets in the snow.' She had to find it out. She touched the furry object and it started to move! It grew long tusks and a trunk. Two ears appeared and four legs spreaded out. Ivy was startled at first, 'A mammoth! But they became extinct four thousand years ago.'

The mammoth was moaning. It was in pain. Ivy saw a deep cut on the mammoth's leg. 'Oh! If only I had paid attention to the teacher in class,' murmured Ivy. 'Then I might know how to treat mammoth's wounds!' Luckily Ivy had a bottle of hand sanitiser in her pocket. She took it out and poured it onto the mammoth's wound. 'This might hurt a little,' she said. The mammoth groaned. Ivy tore a piece of her pants and put it around the mammoth's leg as a bandage. She helped the mammoth to walk and it led her to its home.

Inside, Ivy felt much warmer. 'Thank you for helping me,' said the mammoth. Ivy was shocked, 'You can talk?' The mammoth nodded, 'Now do you think the Ice Age is boring?' Ivy shook her head. 'Before you go, I would like to show you something,' said the mammoth. It stepped outside. Ivy followed. There's saber-tooth tigers, ground sloths, etc. They all greeted Ivy and motioned her to an ice door.

The mammoth wrapped a scarf on Ivy's neck and she was whisked away by a pile of snowflakes. Ivy opened her eyes and noticed that there were still snow on her hair and shoulders. The scarf that the mammoth had given her was still there. 'It is real!' whispered Ivy. She walked back home happily while saying 'Thank you'.
