Sam is a wasteful boy who never treasures the resources in the Earth. One day, he came back home from school. As usual, he turned on both the air-conditioner and the fan. He even kept the door of the fridge open after he got his ice-cream.

Suddenly, a bone-chilling wind swept through the air. All of a sudden, he found himself transported to a large surface of glacier.

Everything around him was white and the ice shimmering brightly under the sunlight, he could barely open his eyes. All at once, he heard a deep rumble coming from the ground. His heart raced as he noticed the sound grew louder and closer.

'Oh no! How come there are so many mammoths, dire wolves and cave bears chasing after me? Am I in the Ice Age now?' shouted Sam. While Sam was escaping, the animals smiled and said gently, 'Where are you from? We have never met you before. If you get lost, we are willing to help you!' Although Sam was a bit skeptical, he still followed them. Then, the animals brought him around and showed him some beautiful natural features such as lakes and snow mountains. It was the first time that Sam realised the beauty and power of the nature.

He started to feel ashamed and regretted for his environmentally harmful actions. He promised to save these animals from extinction by using less energy. Also he wanted to protect the environment so that our next generations can see these stunning natural features.

He dropped a tear for his selfish behaviours. When the tear reached the surface of the ice, an intense cold wrapped around him. After a second he appeared at his home again. Without hesitation, he turned off the air-conditioner.
